Avem Quirks Medical Vaccine Fridges

AQ Medical vaccine refrigerators are compact, robust and cost effective units, purpose-built for vaccine storage following the Australian Government Department of Health's 'Strive for 5' vaccine storage guidelines.

They were designed with low noise output and consistent temperature readings in mind, and maintain a stable temperature between the recommended +2°C to +8°C. They hold safety features such as visual and audible alarms in the event that temperatures fluctuate outside the set range.

All AQ Medical refrigerators are accredited by the Quality Care Pharmacy Program (QCPP), a quality assurance program that was developed by the Pharmacy Guild of Australia in consultation with the Pharmaceutical Society of Australia.

AQ Medical units are also backed by the extensive Avem Quirks service network. With qualified technicians and warehousing facilities across Australia, we can deliver responsive service and exceptional support on a national level.

CHOOSING THE RIGHT ELECTROSURGERY DEVICE

Electrosurgical Units (ESU) are low-power, high-frequency, high-voltage medical devices that are used for various skin surgical procedures. Electrosurgical units are a versatile tool used in dermatology, pulmonary medicine, gastroenterology, plastic surgery, ENT, OB-GYN, and other medical specialties where precise tissue manipulation and control are needed. It allows healthcare professionals to perform procedures with minimal bleeding and scarring (compared to other methods like scalpel excision). Dermatologists commonly use ESUs for the removal of skin cancers, skin tags, red skin, sun spots, skin lesions, warts, moles, and other unwanted tissue.

The two main uses of an electrocautery unit are to cut and cauterize. They work with a steady current to heat up and destroy targeted tissue, which can have different outcomes depending on the technique and power settings used. Electrocautery is the technique to dissect soft tissue quickly and cleanly during surgery. Electrocautery uses high-frequency current to heat and burn the tissue, effectively cauterizing blood vessels to minimize bleeding during surgical procedures. Electrocautery devices are far more sophisticated than units that just do electrocauterization. Another feature of a quality ESU is desiccation which dehydrates the tissue causing skin to die off without looking burned.

For some small surgery types, local anesthesia is not required but for larger surgical areas local anesthesia is needed. The pain is from the burning of tissue, not from the electric current. Heat is created at a cellular level and will not damage or affect muscles or nerves.

A quality electrocautery unit will allow for a wide range of waveforms, automatic safety cut-offs, LED displays, and an assortment of accessories, like foot pedal control.

When choosing an ESU that is right for your facility, clinic or practice consider all the surgery types you will be using it for, available accessories, manufacturer support, value for money, and warranty length.

The Hyfrecator 2000

The term hyfrecator is derived from a combination of "high-frequency" and "eradicator," which was a brand name created by the Birtcher Corporation in 1939. ConMed Corporation acquired Birtcher in 1995 and today all machines that are labelled as hyfrecators are made by ConMed.

The ConMed Hyfrecator 2000 features a speed dial for precise power control and features a low mode for 0-20 Watts with 0.1 Watt increments when under 10 Watts and a high mode for 0-35 Watts with 1 Watt increments. The unit also comes with an autoclavable pencil, an LED screen, and various mounting options.

Bovie Desiccators

As the hyfrecator is proprietary to ConMed there are similar products called desiccators from Bovie, which are similar in price, wavelength settings, power outputs, and accessories. Some of the more budget models are used primarily in dermatology.

The latest model, the Bovie DERM 942, can achieve up to 40 Watts output and has fewer parts resulting in lower internal heat being generated. The Bovie 942 also comes with six different dermal tips and a massive four-year warranty.

AED NOW REQUIRED FOR RACGP ACCREDITATION

It is well known that rapid defibrillation combined with cardiopulmonary resuscitation (CPR) can greatly improve the chances of surviving sudden cardiac arrest. Performing CPR on its own gives the patient a 5% chance of survival but by combining CPR with an automated external defibrillator (AED) the chances of saving the patient increase to above 50%.

When the RACGP released its latest set of accreditation benchmarks earlier in 2023, Standard 5 included clear guidelines for resuscitation equipment requirements. Criterion GP5.2 for Practice Equipment accreditation states that practices must have an automated external defibrillator with clear signage showing where the device is located, the device must be easily accessible and maintained as per the manufacturer's instructions.

AED devices must also be kept in a location that is not in direct sunlight, away from weather elements and areas with extreme temperatures as this will affect the battery life and performance of the device. Maintenance records should be kept for inspection dates, battery changes, electrode pad replacements, and any other maintenance activities.

Sudden cardiac arrest refers to the abrupt stopping of the heart's pumping, resulting in inadequate blood supply to the brain and essential organs. Defibrillators work by delivering an electrical shock to the heart, which can help restore its normal rhythm. The earlier a defibrillator is used, the higher the chances of successfully restoring a normal heart rhythm.

SSS Australia stocks a varied selection of automated external defibrillator devices and related products.
